ESG-funds

Funds that promote environmental or social factors and ensure good governance practices are called ESG funds. The funds promote ESG by investing, for example, in companies that focus on climate and employee conditions, diversity or anti-corruption. They can also work actively to influence companies to become more sustainable or to refrain from investing in companies that have a large and detrimental climate impact.

ESG funds comply with Article 8 of the EU regulation on sustainability-related disclosures in the financial services sector.

All our investment options adhere to our Responsible Investment Policy, which supports our ambition to create attractive returns for you and contribute to sustainable development. This entails, for example, that we do not invest in companies involved in controversial weapons or companies generating a significant share of revenue from tar sands, thermal coal and tobacco. In addition, we do not invest in a number of companies that violate international norms, which include contributing to climate change and water pollution, breaching human rights or involvement in corruption practices. All funds also incorporate sustainability risks as part of selecting attractive investments and exercise active ownership to influence companies in a more responsible and sustainable direction.
